A Report on Voting Trends
in the Natural State

Voices of Arkansas

The year 2006 was a landmark for elections, not just for Arkansas, but for voters across the nation. It marked the first election cycle under the full requirements of the federal Help America Vote Act, which was passed in 2002 to modernize and standardize our country's voting processes.

While the transition was not without growing pains for us here in Arkansas, I couldn't be more proud of our election officials for accepting the challenge and dedicating long hours to put all the components into place. Through concentrated training and education at all levels — from the clerks and commissioners to the poll workers and voters themselves — we overcame the learning curve that's inherent with a change of this magnitude. In the end, we worked together to build our streamlined systems for voter registration, balloting and tabulation that help ensure accuracy and accessibility for all Arkansas voters.

It is my pleasure to present this 2006 edition of Voices of Arkansas. It details the transition in our voter registration system and voting equipment, as well as our training and public education efforts. The report also provides a snapshot of voter turnout and a comprehensive look at voter registration data. I hope you find this look at voting trends across the Natural State both interesting and useful.

Changing the Shape of Voting

For Arkansas voters, the 2006 elections brought to bear the sweeping election reforms passed in response to the nationwide controversy during the 2000 Presidential Election. It was the first election season under the full requirements of the Help America Vote Act, or HAVA, which Congress passed in 2002 to modernize state and federal election practices. HAVA mandated changes in most every part of the voting process, from voter registration to the types of equipment used at the polls, with special emphasis on accessibility for voters with disabilities.

The overriding goal of the changes was to make registering and voting as simple and accessible as possible so that all citizens can be sure their votes are counted accurately.

The Arkansas Secretary of State's office began planning for the changes in 2003, forming a bipartisan advisory board to help chart the state's course for complying with federal mandates. In addition to selecting new voting equipment, the state also developed a centralized statewide voter registration system, worked to improve polling site access and expanded its voter education programs. Arkansas utilized more than $29.5 million in federal dollars and matching state funds to meet HAVA's many requirements.

Voter Registration

Network of Voters in Arkansas

The first component of the state's plan went online in January 2006 with NOVA, the Network of Voters in Arkansas. This uniform voter registration system enables state and county election officials to manage elections quickly, easily and more efficiently through one centralized system.

Previously, county officials across the state used one system for voter information, but exchanging information between users was not possible. With the counties now networked, the enhanced features of NOVA make it easier for the state to maintain the system and for county officials to manage their voter records. Election officials are also free to share data with other county clerks, the Division of Motor Vehicles, the Department of Health and the Arkansas Crime Information Center. More communication helps eliminate duplicate registrations and reduce bloated voter rolls.

An important tool made available to voters through the new system is Voter View. It's a fast and easy way for voters to check their registration status online at www.voterview.org.

By entering simple information, voters can see instantly whether they are currently registered and where their polling site is located.

Focus on Training

Working with County Officials

With a near complete overhaul of the state's election systems, the Secretary of State's office has become an even more vital resource for local election officials. In addition to guiding equipment purchases and ensuring compliance with state and federal laws, the Secretary of State helped provide local election officials with the tools and training they needed to carry out a successful election.

A dedicated team of election coordinators served as a clearinghouse of information and traveled the state to provide on-site training as well as regional and state workshops. Local officials had the opportunity to attend a number of different training sessions throughout the year, from installing and testing voting machines and training poll workers to using the tabulation software for election results. One important series was developed in partnership with the University of Central Arkansas to provide remote training sessions. These interactive videoconferences helped reduce the cost and time of traveling to distant sites.

The Secretary of State's office was also proud to help organize a first for Arkansas — a Commissioners Summit on Arkansas Elections. Led by county election commissioners, the summit was held a month before the General Election to provide an open forum for sharing ideas and solutions. More than 200 officials attended the two-day meeting.

Serving Voters with Disabilities

The Secretary of State administered more than $250,000 in grants to ensure that individuals with disabilities have full access to the state's polling sites. Over 200 polling sites in 27 counties received funds to make improvements such as new entry ramps, upgraded door hardware, paved parking and new handrails.

Once inside the polls, voters with visual disabilities and limited mobility now find voting machines equipped to serve them. Features such as specialized keypads, portable touchscreens and audio ballots allow these voters to cast their ballots privately without assistance, many for the first time.

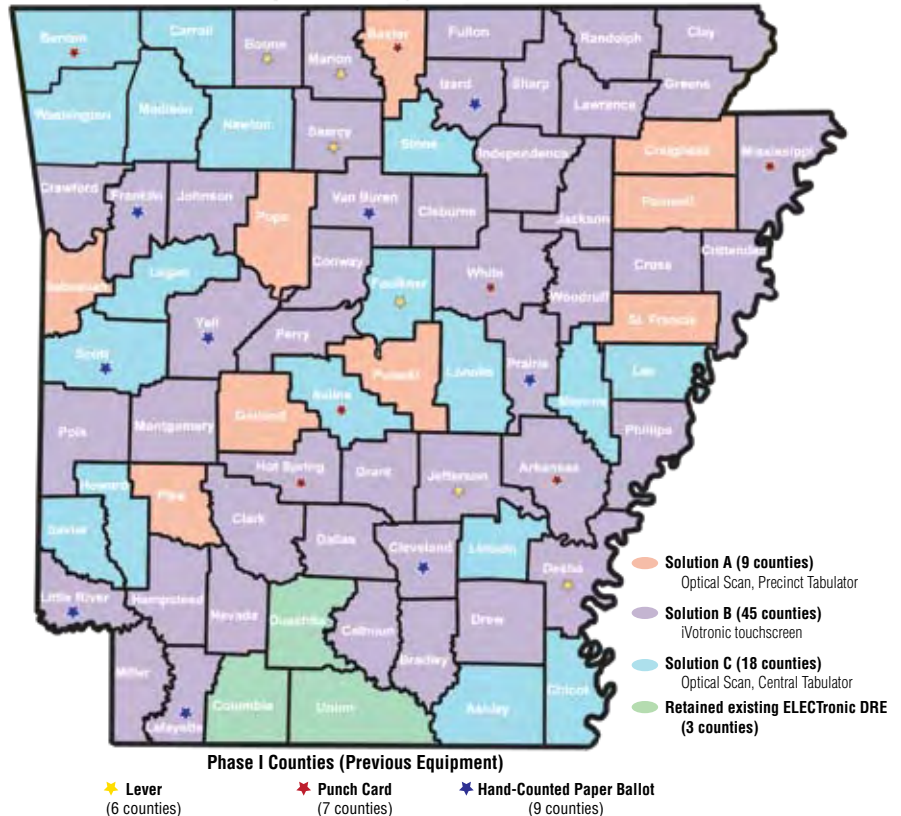

21st Century Voting

Updating Arkansas's Voting Systems

One of the key objectives of the Help America Vote Act was replacing outdated voting equipment across the country. The main targets were punch card and lever systems (previously used in 13 Arkansas counties) and hand-counted paper ballots (nine counties). The remaining counties upgraded or replaced their existing electronic systems to become HAVA-compliant.

The Secretary of State's office selected Electronic Systems & Software as the state's voting machine vendor. Counties had their choice of voting systems: direct recording electronic (DRE) or optical scanned paper ballots with tabulators at each polling site or one central tabulator for the county. Local election officials selected the system that offered the most efficient, cost-effective option for their voters. Three counties — Columbia, Ouachita and Union — were able to keep their existing DRE systems that were modified to meet state and federal requirements.

Voting Equipment Selections — November 2006

The iVotronic Touchscreen

Each polling site in 72 counties has at least one iVotronic touchscreen DRE with special features for voters with disabilities. The touchscreen puts the ballot right at the voters' fingertips – just point and touch to vote. The screen is simple to read, and voters can clearly review their choices on screen as they're made and once again before casting the entire ballot. The iVotronic also prints a paper record that remains in the machine but allows voters to verify their votes in real time. Officials use the paper printout for recounts.

Optical Scan Ballot

With the optical scan system, voters mark paper ballots that are fed into a scanner located at either the polling site (precinct tabulator) or at a central location in the county (central tabulator). The scanner "reads" the ballots electronically and totals the votes after the polls close.

Precinct tabulators alert voters when they have voted too many times in one race (overvote) or did not vote in a race at all (undervote). In counties that use a central tabulator, voters must check their ballots very carefully for overvotes and undervotes before placing in the ballot box. Once the ballot is accepted by the machine or dropped into the ballot box, it is final.

The ELECTronic DRE

The ELECTronic voting system features a large ballot mounted on a touch-sensitive panel. For each voter, poll workers activate the system and choose the appropriate ballot style using a panel on the back of the machine. The voter then touches numbered boxes beside each choice. Flashing lights indicate races for which the voter has not yet voted.

Vote Naturally

Reaching Voters in the Natural State

Change can foster uncertainty, which is why the Secretary of State made it a top priority to inform Arkansas voters and build confidence in the new procedures awaiting them at the polls. With federal HAVA funds earmarked for public education, the Secretary of State developed a comprehensive education program to raise awareness and make information readily available to all Arkansans.

The resulting campaign, Vote Naturally, reached out to citizens in the Natural State to illustrate how simple the new technology is to use. Real Arkansas voters appeared in the campaign, speaking for the accuracy and accessibility of the new voting systems. Public service announcements appeared in television, radio and newspapers across the state, as well as through bill inserts for customers of AT&T and the Electric Cooperatives of Arkansas. Those ads along with other printed materials directed voters to a website, www.VoteNaturally.org, a one-stop shop for voter information. The site, which remains an active resource for 2008, provides how-to videos and step-by-step information on what Arkansans can expect on Election Day. It also serves as a clearinghouse of resources for county clerks and county election commissioners.

As part of the public education program, Secretary of State staff members traveled around the state, bringing the machines directly to the voters through demonstrations at civic clubs, senior citizen centers, festivals, schools and other groups. Answering questions and giving citizens that hands-on experience in a neutral setting was an ideal way to increase their comfort level.

The 2006 Vote

Votes Cast for Lieutenant Governor in the Primary Election

Votes Cast for Governor in the General Election

The 2006 elections marked the first time since 1978 — the year Bill Clinton first won his bid for governor — that the race for Arkansas’s top office did not include an incumbent.

Neither the Democrat nor Republican parties saw a contested race for their gubernatorial nominee in the Primary Election. The lieutenant governor’s field proved the one to watch with a total of eight candidates vying for the nomination. Without the governor’s race, however, voter turnout* was low at 21.7 percent.

November’s General Election brought a first for Arkansas with Green Party nominees for several state offices. The race for governor also included a relatively strong showing for an independent candidate. Even with the expanded field, however, the November turnout was 48 percent, down almost 3 percent from 2002. Arkansas’s turnout rate* was in line with the national average among registered voters, which was 47.5 percent, according to data released by the federal Election Assistance Commission

* Turnout calculated by the number of voters casting a ballot in the highest statewide race

The Primary Election

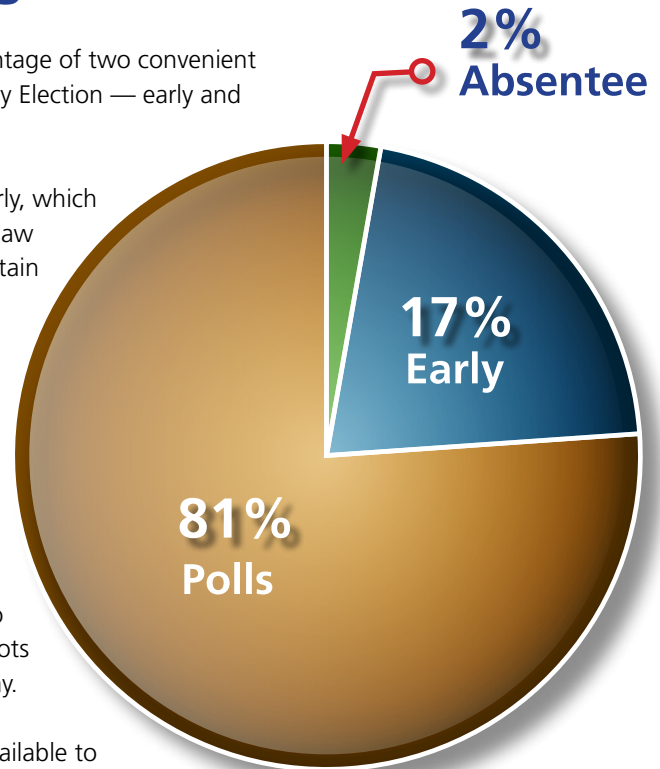

Early & Absentee Voting

Almost 20 percent of Arkansas voters* took advantage of two convenient options for casting a ballot in the May 23rd Primary Election — early and absentee voting.

Any qualified voter in Arkansas can opt to vote early, which in 2006 began 15 days prior to any election. (The law has since been amended to shorter periods for certain elections.) In most counties, the county clerk's office serves as the early voting site, but Arkansas law also permits county boards of election commissioners to offer additional sites outside the courthouse.

Early voting hours during major elections are 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, ending at 5 p.m. on the day before the election. Voters simply go to the designated early polling site and cast their ballots just as they would at their precincts on Election Day.

Another alternative is absentee voting, which is available to qualified voters who are unable to vote at their polls on Election Day due to illness, disability or unavoidable absence. It involves a few more steps than early voting, but this option is especially helpful for students, disabled voters and the elderly, as well as those voters whose work or travel schedules conflict with regular voting hours.

The General Election

Early & Absentee Voting

Early voting is an option that continues to grow in popularity for Arkansas voters. While just under 20 percent voted early in the primary election, almost a third cast their ballots in the 15 days prior to Election Day in November 2006*. That rate is well ahead of the national average of just over 6 percent voting early in the General Election, according to the federal Election Assistance Commission. Absentee voters accounted for 2 percent of Arkansas ballots, compared to 14 percent nationally.

In addition to increased awareness of early voting, the marked rise in early voting from Arkansas's primaries can be attributed in part to new voting equipment that rolled out in full for the November 7th General Election. Officials across the state encouraged early voting — a time when waiting lines are typically short — so that voters could take their time and become accustomed to the new systems.

The early voting period also brought an added benefit for poll workers, who were able to gain experience and grow more comfortable with operating the equipment with voters present.

Voter Registration 2006

Registering Voters in Arkansas

In addition to the new requirements of the Help America Vote Act, voter registration is governed by another reform effort, the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) of 1993. Implemented in Arkansas in 1996, NVRA is more commonly known as the Motor Voter Law because it expanded voter registration beyond the courthouse into other agencies that serve the public, such as driver's license offices.

While HAVA's main focus was on the accuracy and accessibility of voting, the purpose of NVRA was to improve the accuracy and accessibility of voter registration. NVRA makes registration available and convenient for under-served populations by allowing a wide variety of options for where and how to apply for registration. Places such as public assistance offices, state agencies and military offices, as well as libraries and post offices offer voter registration applications. Anyone can conduct a voter registration drive, or applicants can simply fill out the form and drop it in the mail.

Voter Registration 2006

One change in voter registration that did occur under HAVA was the creation of a true voter registration network. Although Arkansas implemented an electronic voter registration system in 1996, it only allowed counties access to their own voter rolls. That limitation made it difficult to transfer voters who move to another county and sometimes resulted in duplicate registrations. The new Network of Voters in Arkansas (NOVA) is a centralized, uniform system that makes it easier to verify voter information and maintain accurate data.

In fact, as data was transferred into the new registration system, county officials took that opportunity to inspect voter rolls and correct incomplete or outdated data. That clean-up is a major factor in the 3.5 percent drop in the overall voter registration rate from 2004.
